Centers for Independence Names Jordan Boehm Chief Financial Officer

MILWAUKEE, WI, (Aug. 20, 2026)–Centers for Independence (CFI), a leader in supporting people with disabilities and behavioral health needs through innovative, person-centered programs, announced that Jordan Boehm has been named Chief Financial Officer. Boehm joins CFI's executive leadership team after serving on its board of directors, bringing extensive financial expertise, institutional knowledge and a commitment to advancing healthy, hopeful and inclusive communities.

Boehm is a seasoned finance and operations executive with more than 15 years of experience in public accounting, serving state and local governments, nonprofit organizations and institutions of higher education. Throughout his career, he has advised clients on financial reporting, budgeting, cash management, grant compliance and a broad range of strategic and operational finance matters.

"Jordan brings a unique combination of financial expertise, strategic insight and a deep understanding of our organization," said Heidi Chada, CFI President & CEO. "He understands our mission, values and the communities we serve. His leadership will help us continue to strengthen our financial foundation, support sustainable growth and expand our impact for the people who rely on our services."

As CFO, Boehm will provide strategic financial leadership to support the agency's long-term growth, sustainability and operational excellence while advancing CFI's impact across the communities it serves. He will oversee the organization's financial operations and ensure strong fiscal stewardship while aligning resources with CFI's mission and strategic priorities.

"Witnessing the positive difference CFI makes in the lives of clients and their families has reinforced my admiration for the organization's work and mission," said Boehm. "I am honored to join the team in this capacity and look forward to helping advance CFI's mission and maximize our impact in the community."
